The studies carried out on this research area are aimed at identifying the effects of the changes in the models of governance of the public sector within the national and international contexts. Public sector is going through a delicate period of change produced on one hand by clear institutional renewal and, on the other, by a renewed demand for public goods and services which should be adequate in quantity and quality for the changing needs of the community. These events have imposed a general reorganisation of the offering of many public services supplied on a local level, in a context in which the requirements for social and managerial efficiency and of effectiveness in satisfying collective needs are key elements for promoting a new model of local governance.
